This report summarizes the two-volume "Final Report of the White House Conference on Indian Education," mandated by 1987 amendments to the Indian Education Act. The conference explored the feasibility of establishing an independent Board of Indian Education and developed recommendations for making educational programs more relevant to the needs of Indians. Chapter 1 of the summary reviews the history of the conference, focusing on the lack of Indian involvement in federal Indian-education programs. Chapter 2 describes planning and preparations, including the organization of state meetings which made recommendations to the conference. Chapter 3 describes 113 conference resolutions, categorized under the following 12 topics: (1) governance of Indian education; (2) Indian community health services and delivery; (3) literacy, student academic achievement, and high school graduation; (4) safe, alcohol/drug-free schools; (5) exceptional education; (6) readiness for school; (7) Native languages and culture; (8) school structure; (9) higher education; (10) school personnel; (11) adult education and parental-community-tribal partnerships; and (12) miscellaneous. A final analysis examines aids and barriers to realization of the conference resolutions, discussing them in the context of the history of the federal-tribal relationship. Particular focus is given to the need for local control of Indian programs. (TES)

WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE ON INDIAN EDUCATION

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

MAY 22, 1992
Dear Mr. President:

I am submitting herewith the Report of the White House Conference on Indian Education which was held on January 22-24, 1992 in Washington, D.C. This report is submitted in accordance with Public Law 100-297, the Augustus F. Hawkins-Hobert T. Stafford Elementary and Secondary School Improvement Amendments of 1988. This act required the submission of a final report to the President within 120 days of the Conference’s completion.

The report was developed from the hard work of the Conference Delegates who attended the Conference. These Delegates produced a total of 113 Resolutions, with accompanying plans of action, designed to provide guidance in future Indian education policy directives.

These Delegates also represented a unique cross-section of the American Indian /Alaska Native communities throughout the country. They included business leaders, educators, parents, students, and elected governmental and school board officials, and are to be commended for their deliberations and dedication.

You will be ably assisted in the preparation of the Report to Congress by Secretary Manuel Lujan, Jr., and Secretary Lamar Alexander. Staff from their respective Departments, Education and the Interior, were actively involved in the Conference planning and its management.

I am certain that your Report to the Congress, relying on the Delegates’ recommendations, will greatly enhance the quality of education to Indian communities throughout the Nation.

Sincerely,

Buck Martin
Director

CHAPTER ONE

BACKGROUND TO THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE ON INDIAN EDUCATION
OVERVIEW...

The White House Conference on Indian Education was authorized in the Augustus F. Hawkins - Robert T. Stafford Elementary and Secondary School Improvement Amendments of 1988, Public Law 100-297 on April 28, 1988. The Conference was mandated to explore the feasibility of establishing an independent Board of Indian Education and to develop recommendations for the improvement of educational programs to make the programs more relevant to the needs of Indians.

HISTORY...

In developing this authorization, the Congress found that recent changes in Federal and State systems stimulated a strong awareness and growth of tribal control of Federally funded services including education. The increase of tribal control, particularly of educational opportunities, has lead to a degree of improvements and greater academic success of American Indian/Alaska Native youth and adults, yet does not seem to be a derogation of Federal responsibility. The Congress recognized that substantial and substantive problems still exist. The Congress believed the opportunity for facilitation of the formulation of solutions could take place through the convening of a White House Conference. The original Senate Bill 1645 was introduced by Senator DeConcini on August 7, 1987. The bill did not contain Title V, the White House Conference. It was not until the hearings of September 29, 1987 on Senate Bill 1645 that the idea was discussed. The following text was reconstructed to provide an historical view leading to the White House Conference on Indian Education held on January 22-24, 1992.

Mr. DeConcini stated in his introduction remarks on the Indian Education Amendments Act:

"...Both the reservation and urban Indian communities rely on these vital programs to educate their children from kindergarten through high school. Parents and leaders of these communities place the highest priority on education. Education is critical to their efforts to achieve economic self-sufficiency. Like many other Americans, they want a better world for their children and look to a strong education system as the best way to achieve this end. They want quality education for their children and many have committed themselves to the task of improving Indian education as members of local school boards, parent committees, and tribal councils. Many others have become teachers and school administrators and devoted themselves to serving in the reservation school systems. This considerable investment in education must not be overlooked. Instead, I believe that it is time for the Federal Government to meet the Indian tribes and its communities halfway and it can do so by strengthening its commitment to Indian education.

The Federal Government, under the Federal trust relationship, has a special duty to the Indian tribes to assure the availability of the best educational opportunities possible. This duty must be fulfilled by our Government in a manner consistent with the Indian self-determination policy. The bill which I am proposing today is designed to strengthen the Federal-tribal partnership as it relates to Indian education. The bill seeks to improve the administration of Indian education programs by refining the existing law and proposing new options for Indian communities to use in their pursuit of excellence in education."

Congressional Record - Senate
August 7, 1987, 511578-511683
During a second hearing held on September 29, 1987 in Washington D.C. The Committee heard testimony from several tribes, organizations, and Departments. It was at this second hearing that the idea of a White House Conference was born.

Mr. John Forkenbrock remarked in his closing testimony on behalf of the Association of Community Tribal Schools:

“One last thing that is not included in S. 1645 that I think I would like to see the committee consider adding to S. 1645 would be the development and the call for a White House conference on Indian education... what is the Federal policy in terms of its responsibility for Indian children enrolled in public schools?

There are policies and procedures now in effect in Public Law 81-874, impact aid, which public schools are supposed to follow to ensure that tribes, are getting their input into the program which, in many cases, aren’t being followed... meeting the needs of Indian students, we have a lot of places where Indian input and tribal involvement is nil, and the policies and procedures that are supposed to be followed in the Federal law are not being followed.

So, I think that there is a real need for the Congress to consider the development of legislation that would call for a White House conference on Indian education where all the various experts in the field from all facets of the program—contract schools, BIA operated schools, public schools, private schools, post-secondary as well as elementary and secondary—get together to discuss some of the things that are needed in terms of where Indian education is headed in the 1990’s.”

Indian Education—Part 2
Hearing Before the Select Committee on Indian Affairs United States Senate
100th Congress, First Session, on S. 1645
September 29, 1987, page 90

During the hearing other tribal officials and Indian education representatives also agreed. Members of the Committee also asked several witnesses about the feasibility of establishing an independent National Board of Indian Education to assume responsibility for Federal policy relating to Indian education. The response overwhelming favored further exploration of this idea.

This suggestion evolved through a discussion by the committee with representatives of national Indian education organizations on the role Indian leadership played in Bureau of Indian Affairs schools in establishing educational policy. The questions also brought into the picture the involvement of Indian leadership in the establishment of policy by the U.S. Department of Education, Indian education section.

The responses varied. The Chairman of the Committee concluded,

“As some of you are aware, I have spent much time in Indian country this year because of my belief that for too long Washington has determined the nature of the problems in Indian country and provided the solutions to those perceived problems. I felt that the time has come to ask the Indian people as to what they consider to be their problems and beckon their wisdom as to what the solutions should be. Some of your responses reflect the responses I have been receiving throughout the land. I believe all of you agree that there is a special trust relationship that exists between the Government of the United States and the various Indian governments, whether it be nations, tribes, or other groups, and that this trust relationship calls upon the United States Government to make certain... that education is provided to all Indians who desire such education and are capable of receiving such. However, apparently, the trust relationship is not carried out to its fullest as intended by Members of Congress and other Administrations, and your response to my question as to the nature of input provided by Indian leadership in the making of education policy ranges from zero to zero plus one, or something like that. Do you think there is justification to establish a separate board of education made up of Indians to establish educational policy?"

S. Hrg. 100-429, Pr. 2. Pages 94-95

Panelists recommended that the suggestion to have an organization such as a separate board to establish Indian education policy be further explored by Indian people. The idea of a National Board of Indian Education is not a new concept. In fact, in 1967 Congress recognized the educational problems and needs of Indian children and the failure of our Government to meet those needs. This resulted in the establishment of a Special Subcommittee on Indian Education, which was chaired by Senator Robert Kennedy. The original intent of this special subcommittee was to "examine, investigate, and make a complete study of any and all matters pertaining to the education of Indian children."

In a Congressional report entitled, "Indian Education: A National Tragedy - A National Challenge" was released in November 1969 by the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, sixty recommendations were made including the creation of a Senate Select Committee on the Human Needs of the American Indians, the convening of a White House Conference on American Indian Affairs, increased funding for culturally sensitive curricula, and greater supervision of State and local officials who receive federal funds for the education of Native Americans in the public schools.

In regards to the White House Conference, the subcommittee found that one primary reason for the failure of national policy and programs for American Indians has been the exclusion - or the token involvement of Indians, in determining policy or planning of programs. It was believed that the White House Conference would reverse this practice.

"Such a White House Conference could provide for broad scale participation of Indians in extensive deliberations of the tribal, local, and regional levels, in preparation for the National Conference. The report of the Conference, with detailed policy, legislative, and program recommendations, could serve as the blueprint for reform and change over the next generation. As an indication of the widespread support in the Indian community for this approach, the National Congress of American Indians has strongly endorsed the need and desirability of such a conference in its 1968 and 1969 annual conventions...."

The subcommittee also recommended the establishment of a National Indian Board of Indian Education with authority to set standards and criteria for the Federal schools. It was envision that the National Board would oversee operations of the schools, be empowered to participate in the negotiation of contracts with tribes and communities to run local school systems for Indians; make suggestions for nominees for Assistant Commissioner for Education in the Department of the Interior and serve in a advisory role with respect to Federal education programs involving Indians in the public schools.
The report opened the door for many possibilities that would be responsive to Indian needs. A primary theme to the overall report was the goal of increased participation and control of educational programs by local communities. Over the past twenty years Congress and the Administration have demonstrated a willingness to address this concept through a variety of actions. Including proposed legislation on a National Indian Board of Indian Education and a National Board of Regents for Indian Education. However, the effort to establish a National Board of Indian Education met with some opposition during subcommittee hearings in April and May 1971. Some tribes voiced opposition to fragmenting the Bureau through removal of its education function to a new agency. As a result of the efforts the National Advisory Council of Indian Education was established in the Indian Education Act (P.L. 92-318).

The Indian Education Act also required public school districts to involve parents and community members in the administration of Federal funds for Indian children.

Then, in 1975, legislation was introduced and enacted (P.L. 93-638, the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act) which added new requirements for Indian involvement in public school programs. The Act granted tribes the power to sign contracts with federal agencies to administer government programs. The Education Amendments Act of 1978 (P.L. 95-561) called for greater community control of Indian schools. This Act also establish a rational basis for the distribution of funds among the Bureau of Indian Affairs schools named the Indian School Equalization Program.

Also, in 1976, P.L. 94-437, the Indian Health Care Improvement Act further extended the ideas of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act, by encouraging Native organizations to manage their own clinics and hospitals.

In 1977, the Senate reestablished it Select Committee on Indian Affairs to oversee legislation affecting Native people, as a result of the findings of the American Indian Policy Review Commission Report. Other related action included, the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act (P.L. 95-471) which supported the development of higher education within Indian communities, and the Indian Child Welfare Act (P.L. 95-608) which gave tribes the authority to supervise adoptions involving their members.

The issue of a National Board of Indian Education was again discussed in 1978 and 1979, when the Administration proposed a plan to move the Bureau of Indian Affairs, Division of Education to the Secretary of Education. It again surfaced in 1982, when the BIA reorganization plan was being discussed.

And finally in 1987, before the Senate Select Committee on Indian Affairs the topic resurfaced as presented above. However, in the conclusion of the panel testimony the Chairman recommended, based on the unanimous support of the panel, that the staff of the committee and the members of the panel gather statistics available on Indian education and develop ideas on what an Indian board of trustees, a board of education, or a board of regents should look like, where it should be located and the types of powers that it should have. This recommendation became the framework from which Part E - White House Conference on Indian Education, Title V - Indian Education Amendments of 1988, Public Law 100-297, was developed.
CHAPTER TWO
Advisory Committee Responsibilities . . .

The White House Conference on Indian Education Advisory Committee was composed of 24 individuals who were selected for their expertise and efforts on behalf of Indian education. Five individuals were designated by the Speaker of the House of Representatives; five individuals were designated by the President pro tempore of the Senate; and ten individuals were appointed by the President. The enabling statute also directed the designation of specific appointments: the Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Indian Affairs or his delegate; the Secretary of Education or a delegate of the Secretary; the Director of the Task Force and the Chairman of the National Advisory Council on Indian Education. [Refer to P.L. 100-297, Part E, Section 5506]

The purpose of the Advisory Committee was to assist and advise the Task Force in planning and conducting the Conference. Their purpose was also identified in Public Law 102-27. It was the intent of the Congress, when Public Law 100-297 was enacted, that the Advisory Committee was to play a major role in the preconference planning process. The policy direction and guidance governing the preconference planning process was to ultimately rest with the Advisory Committee.

State Steering Committee Responsibilities . . .

State Steering Committees were formed in States with large concentrations of American Indians. They met regularly, provided assistance and made commitments to develop State-wide activities. Each State Steering Committee included a broad cross-section of representation from all segments of the Indian population within the State. The representative group included tribal leadership, Bureau of Indian Affairs school officials, State Indian Education Departments and other Public School officials, Indian education organization representatives, higher education members, Title V JOM, Parent Advisory Committee representatives, as well as other members of the State appropriate for this activity.

In order to facilitate effective communication between State efforts and the coordination of the Task Force, the State-wide committees selected a contact person. The State contact was the person whom the Task Force communicated directly with on the progress of the Conference, coordination of activities and other matters. The State contact was the communication link for the State Steering Committee to the Task Force. The State Steering Committee was the communication link to the local communities. It was extremely important for State-wide Planning Steering Committee representatives to take a highly active role. It was these representatives who generated the effectiveness of the overall White House Conference on Indian Education by motivating Indian people in the local communities to participate and input their concerns and ideas.

In June 1991, Memorandum of Agreements (MOA) were made available from the Task Force/Department of the Interior to each State Steering Committee to provide them technical and financial assistance. These MOAs enabled each State Steering Committee to organize and conduct conferences and other meetings in order to prepare for the White House Conference on Indian Education.

_Everybody that registered here will have a very special place in the annals of Indian education... On the other hand, there is a tremendous responsibility and accountability that rests on our shoulders._

_Mr. Bordeaux_
(WHCIE Co-Chair)
Under each MOA, the State Steering Committee Contact person was responsible for their State activities related to the overall planning, organizing and meeting that helped prepare and finalize their recommendations to the Conference. The State Steering Committee Contact person was also responsible for all the reporting requirements under the Memorandum of Agreement.

Decisions regarding required activities under the Memorandum of Agreement were made by the State Steering Committee and carried out by the State Steering Committee Contact person. The primary purpose of these committees was to make recommendations to the Conference.

As a result of these efforts 30 State, Regional and a tribal reports were accomplished under the Memorandum of Agreements. Several Steering Committees have continued their efforts, such as the Nevada State Indian Education Committee, who adopted a State resolution to keep the State Indian Education Committee an ongoing effort, and the New Mexico Steering Committee who held a post-conference and made a presentation before their State Legislative Education Study Committee. Many States involved with the White House Conference on Indian Education had post-conference activities to review and the conference resolutions, as well as to take a closer look at their individual State reports and recommendations for implementation purposes.

Delegate Responsibilities . . .

The role and responsibilities of the Delegates appointed to the White House Conference on Indian Education was to give direction regarding the purpose of the White House Conference on Indian Education in accordance to Public Law 100-297, as amended. These purposes included:

1. explore the feasibility of establishing an independent Board of Indian Education that would assume responsibility for all existing Federal programs relating to the education of Indians, and
2. develop recommendations for the improvement of educational programs to make the programs more relevant to the needs of Indians, in accordance with the findings set forth in section 5501.

To accomplish these purposes appointed Delegates took several actions including but not limited to: meeting informally with individual State groups and individuals to get input on possible resolutions; participating in State-wide preconferences; reviewing preconference recommendations compiled by the Task Force; discussing and developing Conference resolutions and plans of action in work sessions during the Conference and adopting proposed resolutions in work sessions before the resolutions were brought to the floor on the last day in the Delegate resolution assembly.

The Delegates achieved more than was expected for the White House Conference on Indian Education.
CONFERENCE STRUCTURE AND GOALS

The purpose of the White House Conference on Indian Education was to develop recommendations for the improvement of educational programs to make the programs more relevant to the needs of Indians. As simple as this purpose is stated the difficulty of developing recommendations which are answerable and accountable to Indians in rural and urban situations as well as Indians who are Federally recognized and Indians not Federally recognized was not an easy task. The Advisory Committee of the White House Conference on Indian Education developed and adopted guiding principles from which conference action could be guided.

The Advisory Committee to the White House Conference on Indian Education in adopting the guiding principles of the White House Conference on Indian Education believed that there must be significant changes in the education of American Indians and Alaska Natives before quality education can be realized nationally. The changes must be action oriented, innovative, community and tribally based, with those in control and responsible and held accountable for providing quality education. The critical items to achieve this overall belief are responsibility and accountability, change and quality improvement and commitment and involvement.

The guiding principles were very important in shaping the Conference activities. Pre-conference recommendations were developed from State Reports for the national conference. The State recommendations were placed into categories which were designed to cover all topic areas identified for the Conference with the intend to help facilitate the development of resolutions and plans of action, provide clear implementation guidance, and to ensure that all State recommendations received Delegate consideration. The categories for each of the topic areas were: student needs; family needs; community/tribe needs; educational institution, state, federal and other issues. The approach used was a holistic approach which allowed for areas affecting student outcomes to be included in such areas as housing issues, health issues, and transportation issues.

Another important factor in developing recommendations was the adoption of the Conference rules to govern the process and procedures for the adoption of the Conference resolutions and plans of action.

The Final Adopted Rules were effective in the organization of the overall Conference. The rules were particularly effective during the Delegate Resolution Assembly.

The guiding principles, the work session process and strategy, and the final adopted rules provided the structure necessary for a successful conference. The Conference structure allowed for local issues and ideas to be addressed and reviewed through the preconference recommendations and participation of many Delegates in “township style meetings” called work sessions of the Conference. The structure allowed for an open forum session for individuals to present educational findings and recommendations to the Conference for work session use. The Delegate Resolution Assembly gave Delegates opportunities for open debate on approved work session resolutions before final adoption of resolutions.

Overall, the conference structure proved to be an effective process in reaching the White House Conference on Indian Education goals.
CHAPTER THREE

CONFERENCE OUTCOME
The White House Conference on Indian Education (WHCIE) was enacted as Public Law 100-297. The Conference was convened on January 22, and adjourned on January 24, 1992. The Conference was mandated to develop recommendations to improve Indian education services. The Conference was structured into working sessions that maximized efforts to develop recommendations.

This Conference was uniquely designed to facilitate solutions, not revisit and redebate known problems. This goal was realized within the resolutions and plans of action. Additionally, there was the expectation that the solutions would produce a holistic picture that brought to light Indian education, health, and cultural needs. This holistic overview of needs did occur which helped to identify actions and solutions in a comprehensive manner.

Other broad issues and proposals that were predominated throughout the development of the resolutions included a heavy emphasis on tribal involvement and control at all levels of education planning and administration. Tribes were targeted for having their capabilities strengthened through the development and application of appropriate tribal codes and support services.

Another proposal was the partnerships that could be established among parties responsible for elevating the quality and capabilities Indian education personnel and services. These partnerships were very important in many of the strategies recommended to achieve specific goals. These strategies included linkages between educational institutions to expand opportunities for students and communities, networking between specific American Indian/Alaska Native and tribal organizations to share technical resource capabilities, and partnerships between tribal, State and Federal agencies to more effectively maximize and fulfill their respective responsibilities.

Culturally relevant and accurate information and materials was an overwhelming concern on all fronts. The resolutions proposed that there was a need to develop and provide culturally appropriate curriculum, materials, standards and other resources for a variety of purposes. These purposes included providing education personnel with the necessary knowledge and expertise to effectively serve Indian students and communities. It was also expected that these tools would provide new standards of achievement for both students and institutions, as well as allow for greater determination on scope of need in a truly relevant and holistic manner.
This reference document highlights the resolutions adopted by the Delegates to the White House Conference on Indian Education, held in Washington, D.C. on January 22-24, 1992. The corrections presented in this version were made in accordance with a review of the official written transcript of the White House Conference on Indian Education, Plenary Session, January 24, 1992.

Executive Summary Analysis...

Goals of Analysis

The goals of the Conference were categorized as education oriented. However the affected constituency and delegates did not confine their vision to the “traditional” construct of the definition of education.

Indian families and communities are very aware that the needs of their children are interwoven into all aspects of their lives. American Indian and Alaska Native communities have strong foundation of spiritual beliefs and philosophies most of which encompass the circular nature of life that upholds the interconnection between all beings and things. It was this outlook that provided the reinforcement to the White House Conference on Indian Education to address the educational needs in a holistic manner.

The task for collecting concerns which impacted the educational services of Indian communities, were drawn from a wide array of sources. It was the responsibility of the Task Force to attempt to portray these issues and concerns for the delegate’s consideration in the most inter-related form possible.

The Task Force designed a matrix which appeared to embody the Indian community’s identified issues of concern. (Figure 1.) This circular matrix represented the all-encompassing nature of both issues and possible solutions. This “dream catcher’s” universe of needs and opportunities is symbolic of the circumstances confronting Indian community. On one hand, the barriers and specific elements which comprise the present reality must be “caught” and addressed, but the goals and aspirations must also be sought and fostered.

This analysis will depict the issues by these goals and aspirations, as well as the means or mechanism proposed by the Delegates to resolve or eliminate barriers. The commonalities of concerns and recommendations, from topic area to topic area, will be identified for policy purposes. When differences in policy goals are proposed, for similar or overlapping issues and recommendations, these will also be summarized. This summary will portray these overlapping recommendations juxtaposed against those policies or issues they address to differentiate the instigating cause or intended outcome; such as local community control over actions which may be defined as a new effort and entity, or identified as tribally-controlled.

The resultant blueprint for action will also convey future policy issues and implications. The many levels of involvement and action that are required to implement these recommendations will require comprehensive participation by all affected parties. When and how, such endeavors, from local Indian communities to national policy makers, should be undertaken are questions that this report should provoke.

Parameters of the Conference and Issues

The Conference was designed to be a “working” conference to develop long-term and short-term strategies from recommendations adopted by the Delegates. The 30 state and regional pre-conference activities, produced numerous recommendations for consideration by the Conference Delegates. The Delegates were mailed materials prior to the Conference which contained specific instructions to assist Delegates in their review and preparation. However, the range of issues and the number of issues, as well as other constraints, combined to place limitations on both the selection of issues chosen and the amount of specificity available for guidance.
The same limitations that existed for review of Pre-Conference recommendations also affected the consideration of new issues raised during the Conference. There were some issues raised on the final day of the Conference that were additional issues of concern, but only four resolutions capturing these concerns were eventually adopted. Another factor was the inherent assumption that many of the Delegates had with respect to key principles underlying Federal-Indian issues. One key principle was that of respective powers and responsibilities of tribal, State and Federal governments. Further, it was expected that how these governments inter-related with one another, and their affiliate entities, was also understood, particularly in relationship to the need for change or action.

Another assumption was the level of clarity expressed in the many resolutions and plans of action in the area of statutory and administrative authority targeted for change or action. Some topic areas were very precise on what legislation should be amended and how, or what a legislative amendment ought to accomplish. Some topic areas felt that the Executive Branch was the place to impact, through recommendations for development and adoption of Executive Orders. Other topic areas proposed that much more explicit action take place with regards to programs and issues. Such programs or issues were often identified solely by acronym or original public law citation.
These assumptions require a prior understanding of tribes and their relationship with the United States, to fully appreciate the Conference Delegates’ concerns and their proposed solutions.

The Federal-Indian relationship is not one well understood by the general society. For many individuals, their sole exposure to “Indians” has been provided through movies and the print media from a non-Indian view and, usually, in the absence of accurate historical background. This deficiency in society’s learning environment is at the root of some of the recommendations adopted by the Conference Delegates. A brief explanation is provided below to aid in understanding the Federal-Indian relationship. The Federal government, a government-to-government, political relationship with tribes that is rooted in the Constitution and further strengthened by congressionally-ratified treaties, Executive Orders, case law, and specific and general statutes to assist American Indian and Alaska Native communities and individuals. This relationship even pre-dates the Declaration of Independence, when the colonial powers entered into formal agreements with tribes to exchange lands for peace, goods, and other purposes.

When the United States declared its independence and, eventually, adopted its constitution, there were three key clauses incorporated into this charter for the protection and benefit of tribes and their people. This provision, under Article I, Section 8, Clause 3 stated that only the United States (and not States) had the power to regulate and permit commerce with tribes. Article II, section 2, clause 2 grants Congress plenary power to regulate commerce with Indian tribes, as it does with foreign nations and the States. Section 14, Amendment XIV of the Constitution also exempts tribes from taxation. Subsequently, the courts, based on these authorities, recognized that tribes, as dependent nations, were beneficiaries of a trust responsibility on the part of the United States.

These principles of Federal-Indian law have been tested over the past two centuries. Yet, for the most part, the rights of tribes as sovereign nations whose relationship is with the United States first, and not those States or territories in which they reside, have been upheld.

As this relationship has been strengthened through successive laws and Executive Orders, and as tribes have continued their efforts to determine their own future, the nature of the relationship has also evolved. Where once Federal agencies decided what was appropriate and beneficial to tribes without tribal input, now there is recognition that tribal self-determination is one elemental aspect of their sovereignty. It is the principle of sovereignty and self-determination which underlies many of the issues raised and addressed by the delegates during the Conference. Each tribe has variations in its performance of its responsibilities to their people, based, in part, on the issue or region in which they are located. What may be true for one tribe, for regulating the environment, health and other programs, may not be accurate for other tribes. The reasons for this variation among tribal groups are many and complex. That they exist and create additional barriers, and sometimes opportunities, is a critical element in the development of the many adopted strategies by the Conference Delegates to improve Indian education.

Additionally, during the past fifty years, as Indian people relocated “off-reservation”, either under Federal actions and policies or for their own purposes, there has grown a community of Indian people outside the traditional bounds of “Indian lands”. These segments of the population, often identified as rural or urban Indians, are now identified more as members of their home communities rather than as displaced and unaffiliated individuals. The location of these rural and urban Indian people has placed special needs and demands for services to aid their growth and well-being.

The complexity of the Federal-Tribal relationship needs to be considered when reviewing the adopted resolutions and plans of action. This complexity and the inter-dependency between American Indian and Alaska Native people requires that careful planning and action be undertaken to implement strategies for improvements.
This analysis will identify concerns which require a balancing of competing needs and a means for transition from existing efforts to new activities. The balancing and transition issues, where not addressed by the Delegates in their resolution and plans of action, will especially require a general understanding of the relationships and roles between the United State and American Indian /Alaska Native communities and people.

Analysis

The Conference Delegates endorsed several major goals, which were designed to achieve improved student outcomes and services. The resolutions were designed to emphasize accountability to improved standards, including culturally appropriate ones. However, the predominant underlying principle was the premise that the Federal-Tribal relationship entailed specific duties and responsibilities on the part of the United States, unlike any other Federal-State-Local governmental relationship.

The consistent call by the delegates for the United States to recognize and reaffirm the Federal-Tribal relationship indicates the serious concerns that exist over whether Federal policy makers fully appreciate and understand how their actions affect this relationship. This repeated call expressed a desire to require departments and agencies to uphold this principle in daily operations and reflects a desire to expand and strengthen tribal participation on several fronts.

A strengthened U.S. policy is also expected to provide the dictates necessary to accomplish the more practical activities in realizing equitable access to all relevant resources to produce the desired achievements. There is a valid concern expressed that all Federal agencies make an equal effort to assist tribes and Indian communities. Without a concerted outreach effort there will be a continued lack of tribal participation and access to available resources. The absence of participation and access to opportunities can create limited outcomes which will diminished capabilities for elevating the quality of life for Indian people.

One major theme that was articulated was the premise that tribal control and leadership in education was critical in the strengthening of services. Local control and determination of needs is a demand and goal of all segments of society. Indian country is not different in this respect, but there is additional weight behind this demand given the inability of society to accurately perceive the cultural aspects integral to the values and goals of Indian communities.

Both local control and determination of needs must be viewed in conjunction with another major theme of the inclusion, at every educational level, of appropriate cultural values, language, beliefs, accurate histories, and other expressions. Indian and Alaska Native life is built on the foundation of their tribal beliefs and identity. Yet, obtaining respect for, and fostering such components in an “traditional” education system, have not been very successful. A number of recommendations adopted addressed stronger tribal control over the incorporation of cultural facets in the reform and restructuring of these “traditional/formal” educational systems.

The Delegates did not overlook the need to instill or enhance governmental partnerships among affected entities, tribes, States, Federal, and other bodies. This major theme was an indication of the Indian community’s need to interact more with other entities, as well as become involved in the larger issues confronting all communities.

Comprehensive and holistic services became a major focus for Conference Delegates. This focus conveyed the concern among Indian people that their needs not be treated in linear and isolated efforts. “The shortest route to an objective is not necessarily the best” appears to sum up the related recommendations surrounding this theme.
This comprehensive approach should be viewed as an integral aspect of all the key principles and themes. In particular, when undertaking efforts to identify the scope of educational needs in Indian communities, there are concerns that education needs encompass all related issues and services for all ages and members of the community. Related issues and services were not so broadly interpreted that it could become a Herculean task. The parameters placed on education and related issues or services appeared to be whether there were direct correlation between a service and improved student outcomes, such areas as substance abuse prevention, family violence prevention, and career guidance.

The other key indicator in defining relevance was the correlation between the benefits derived by Indian communities and improved student outcomes. Two examples include the proposed requirement that economic enterprises provide employment in a manner planned by the tribe to coincide with graduating scholarship recipients, and requiring “pay back obligations” by students upon graduation for their scholarship assistance.

There are certain aspects that were not fully addressed or resolved by the Conference Delegates. The unresolved issues did not occur by premeditation or an unwillingness to tackle these issues.

The Delegates were required to work within the various topic areas in which they participated, plus review and approve those resolutions in the final day of the Conference from other topic groups. Consequently, the Delegates were simply unable to fully reflect on the complete picture presented by their combined efforts. The Delegates began an effort to address and accurately present a comprehensive overview of education and related needs. These actions asserted that such needs should be locally determined since the affected Indian people and communities would be most able to recognize and ascertain these needs. While this is an important point, the ability to integrate this activity with the recommendation requiring that funds and services be provided on an equitable basis, becomes problematic.

The assumption to the first resolution is that there are, or will be, clearly understood and accepted criteria for determining true needs in all areas. The second recommendation’s assumption is that the funds will be provided in sufficient amounts to ensure equitability, to provide “comparable” services in obtaining similar goals, such as eliminating illiteracy, substance abuse, and dropout rates.

To begin an administrative process for developing criteria for determining the “scope of need” requires several basic components. First, the data on eligible service population and present level of services available must be current. Second, a clearly defined goal of what is to be achieved through services to be provided must be understood and acceptable to the beneficiary population. Third, how growth will be achieved from the present status to the desired goals must be developed, approved and implemented. Each of these components will require an investment in manpower, resources, and time. When to apply this strategy to the targeted education or related program services must also be determined.

When the definition of need was raised, it was through the provision of services to “American Indian/Alaska Native” people. Yet, many available services are dependent on a variety of factors. Eligibility for services is not consistent from program to program, and agency to agency. One topic group addressed the abolition of the income eligibility requirement for the Head Start Program.

Another topic group recommended that eligibility for “Indian education services” should be in keeping with the respective tribal definitions and requirements for member enrollment. When tribes, tribal or Indian organizations provide services for their populations, a uniform definition for eligibility would eliminate multiple program requirements that must be fulfilled.
Overall, transitioning services into a means of accomplishing the identified education goals is not a process that can be precisely detailed. However, there are ground rules that should be considered on the difficulties confronting such transition. These ground rules include: where tribal input is needed; estimated time frames to accomplish identified tasks, level of risk involved and disclosure of advantages and disadvantages nationally and locally.

Recommendations and plans of action are not specific with respect to priority setting, other than needs and solutions should be tribally and locally determined. In order to have an effective process to implement the many education goals and tasks identified by the Conference Delegates, a means of ensuring fairness in priority setting and equitable allocation of resources must be planned and provided. For example, if certain actions throughout the country are expected to occur concurrently, assistance to Indian communities must follow common national criteria, yet be locally relevant. Specifically, pre-school screening for exceptional and challenged Indian children has been recommended to be joined with efforts to expand early childhood services. This activity will require cooperative efforts in a multi-disciplinary and multi-agency manner.

Potential Issues of Immediacy

There were common issues that Delegates expressed throughout the resolutions and plans of action. These issues were focused on providing resources to ensure a higher quality of standards and services.

Many recommendations have the potential for immediate implementation, utilizing existing authorities of the relevant agencies. There are recommendations which clearly require new authority, and a close scrutiny of agencies' present authorities could determine which issues can be promoted absent such new authority. In some instances, new authority would be useful in preventing any action to transfer funds from one program into a new program diminishing available resources in the drained program.

Conclusion

The resolutions and plans of action adopted by the Conference Delegates are far reaching and, often, interdependent. It is a tremendous accolade to the Delegates that the Conference's work products are so comprehensive and thoughtful.

It will be this same spirit and commitment which will be required to undertake the actions needed to achieve these identified goals and tasks.

The issues that the Delegates addressed can be viewed as a map for the future of Indian education and other related needs. This future is perceived to be inclusive of benefits to both Indian and non-Indian people and communities.

These resolutions and plans of action require each person, community, and institution, to evaluate themselves for their strengths and capabilities. By contributing to each other to achieve better learning environments and student outcomes, the rewards increase exponentially throughout all spectrums of our society.
